

Bars in Paris for 'Madame' Close Doors to Mere Male

Each Fair Customer Has Favorite Cocktail

PARIS, APRIL 22 (U P).—Women, having invaded man's domain and made off with his cigarettes, now are taking his cocktails too.

Women's bars, where men can never get the doorman and where the women of the stage and smartest society gather to exchange late gossip and cocktail recipes, are opening on every corner in downtown Paris.

All over town, the barkeepers are turning out their male customers and fixing up their bars with ribbons and cakes to attract the feminine devotees of cocktails. Some few bars remain conservative, however, and have kept their swinging doors closed to women.

The "steam room," or women's bar, of one of the smartest hostilities in the shade of the Vendôme column, has become a pot of gold for its owners.

Everyone smart has her own cocktail or favorite mixture. Miss Pearl White, for instance, likes the "Clover Club" and Jane Marnac, star of French revues, likes the "Sidecar." The famous Dolly sisters drop in often to take a "Half and Half" and the Duchess De La Rochefoucauld and Princess Michel Murat ask for the "Bolshevik."

The "Bees' Knees" is an invention of Mrs. J. J. Brown of Denver and Paris, widow of the famous miner, and is a rather sweet combination including honey and lemon.

Every day a new one is born for a new customer. The Canadian rum schooner had been sunk off the New Orleans coast less than a day before the "I'm Alone" cocktail appeared.
